1 (a) Donald is a solicitor. His client has instructed him to appeal to the Court of Appeal against a decision made in the High Court. Donald files an appellant's notice by completing a Form N161 and he sends this with the appropriate fee to the Civil Appeals Office Registry in London. He includes three copies of the appellant's notice along with one copy of each of the sealed order of the decision of the High Court, a skeleton argument on behalf of his client and an approved transcript of the High Court judgment. Donald also includes a copy of the appellant's notice to be sent back to him so that he can serve it on the respondent.

(b) Glenda, a solicitor, is representing Miranda in making an appeal to the Court of Appeal. Miranda is in dispute with her business associate, Calvin. Glenda correctly files the appeal with the Civil Appeals Office Registry. She submits all the relevant paperwork, saying that the decision of the lower court against Miranda is unjust. In her skeleton argument Glenda says that the correct procedures were not followed in the previous hearing. The paperwork is returned to Glenda and she serves the notice to appeal and the skeleton argument in respect of the application on Calvin personally at his office. Three days later Glenda realises she did not serve the evidence in support of the appeal. She takes it to Calvin's office but he is not there.

(c) Mustapha and Dipak are in a dispute. Dipak lost in the lower court and now the case is due to go to the Court of Appeal. Dipak instructs his solicitor, Jessica, to complete all the relevant paperwork and serve the correct documents on Mustapha. When the documents are served on Mustapha he files a respondent's notice. This is because Mustapha believes that the lower court's decision should be upheld for reasons other than those given by that court. The permission for appeal application is considered by a judge, who decides an oral hearing should be held 10 days later. As the case is complex the judge directs that Mustapha should attend and so Jessica sends him a copy of her skeleton argument. At the hearing Jessica refers to additional documents that Mustapha has not seen before.
